Find out how to:

- Make your own snow and build a snowman;
- Simulate the sea level rise and learn more about its consequences;
- Create an amazing glacial slime;
- And many more experiments...

Become an ice explorer and discover the science behind climate change

Do you know how snowflakes are formed?

It all starts when a small particle of dust or water freezes creating a nucleus.

From then on, new particles of water come together, creating an ice crystal.

The most frequent ones are flat (thin) and hexagonal (with 6 equal and symmetrical parts).

Scientific experiment

Home-made snow

What will you need?
Material included in the kit:

Extra Material:

- Hair conditioner (preferably white)
- Tray or wide container
- Bowl

ATTENTION: ask an adult for help.

Steps:

1. With the small measuring cup, measure sodium bicarbonate to the 40 ml mark and then place it in a bowl.
2. Ask an adult to measure 5ml of hair conditioner with the small measuring cup and transfer it into the bowl.
3. With the help of the wooden spatula, mix the two components until you get a texture similar to snow: making a small ball when you squeeze it, but quite flaky.

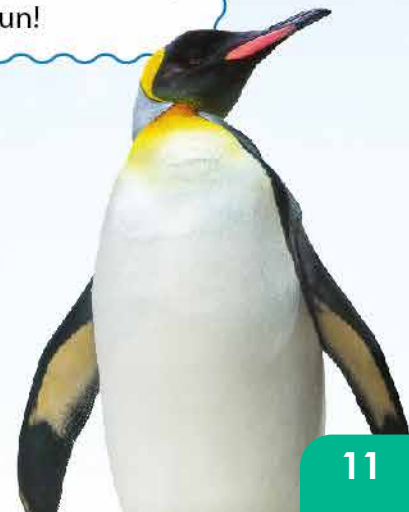

DID YOU KNOW...

The snow affects the sound? When it has just fallen, the snow absorbs sound waves, making the place naturally more peaceful and quiet. If the same snow melts and freezes again, it becomes ice, which amplifies the sound waves and makes it louder.

4. Adjust your home snow: if it's too wet, add more sodium bicarbonate. If it breaks down too easily, add a little more hair conditioner.

5. Place the snow mixture in a large container where you can handle it at will.

Your home-made snow is ready!
Have fun!

ABOUT THE TURTLES

Catapulted from indie comic origins to super stardom by the original murakami-wolf-swenson (mws) animated series, TMNT ran on air for nearly a decade (1987-1996), and ranked #1 in ratings for an unprecedented 5 straight years! Featured in over 190 episodes, the fun-loving, shell-kicking teens are still recognized around the world and fondly remembered by fans with every bite of pizza!

The Evolution of the Turtles ...
A boy's bowl of pet turtles falls into the stench of an underground city sewer. They land on Splinter, a penniless but powerful ninja master who lives in the muck.

Splinter's enemy, Shredder (leader of the evil Foot Clan), pours a disgusting green ooze over Splinter (and accidentally, the Turtles!), hoping to zap him dead.

Instead, the turtle pets mutate into turtle teens, and Splinter turns into the biggest rat ever to face a trap.

Splinter, the big cheese leader, teaches the Turtles the ways of the Ninja! Together, they form a kick-stomping fighting team for the side of good against the deadly Foot Clan! Get ready for the TEENAGE MUTANT NINJA TURTLES!
